seems that Campadonico, having lost about two hundred and eighty-five dollars, accused his partner in the butcher business, Lanini, of taking it, and also implicated in the transaction a clerk named Foppiano. The accused were yesterday honorably discharged by a magistrate, before whom they had been arraigned, and, armed with a cowhide, sought Campadonico, who being found on Beale street was beset by one of the irate men. A fair maiden threw her arms around the cowhider, and thereupon Campadonico fled into the neigh-boring store of Jos. Ware & Co., shouting "murder," and calling for the police. He was followed into the store by Lanini and Foppiano, who immediately resumed the chastisement, and were inflicting him with severe blows when another actor, Joe Leyser, resolved to rescue the terrified victim from further persecution.
